Are you ready to dedicate your career to education? Learn about teacher training programs, learn about state-by-state certification requirements, and get time-tested educator advice on lesson planning, student growth, and classroom management. Teaching is really a noble profession. He is also a time-consuming person, who requires a commitment on his part. Teaching can be very demanding, but it can also be extremely rewarding. Here are five things to consider before taking teaching as your chosen career. Culture/yellowdog/ The Image Bank/ Getty Images To be an effective teacher, you must realize that the time you are at work - those 7 1/2 to 8 hours - must really be spent with children. This means that creating lesson plans and grading tasks will likely take place in your own time. To keep growing and moving forward, teachers also need to create time for professional development. In addition, to really engage with your students, you will probably participate in your activities: attend sports activities and school plays, sponsor a club or class, or go on a trip with your students for various reasons. People often do a big deal with paying teachers. It is true that teachers do not make as much money as many other professionals, especially over time. However, each state and district can vary widely in teachers' salaries. Also, when you look at how much you're paid, be sure to think about it in terms of the number of months worked. For example, if you are starting with a salary of $25,000 but you are off for 8 weeks in the summer, then you should keep this in mind. Many teachers will teach summer school or get summer jobs to help raise their annual salary. Teaching is a strange, revered and compassionated profession at the same time. You'll probably find that when you tell others you're a teacher, they'll actually offer you their condolences. They might even say they couldn't do your job. However, don't be surprised if they then go on to tell you a horror story about your own teachers or your children's education. It's a strange situation and you should face it with your eyes wide open. Everyone has an opinion of what a teacher should be doing. As a teacher you will have a lot of people going in different directions. The modern teacher wears many hats. They act as educators, coaches, activity sponsors, nurses, career advisors, parents, friends and innovators. Keep in mind that in any class, you will have students of different levels and skills and will be judged on how well you can reach each student individualizing their education. This is the education, but at the same time it can make it a truly rewarding experience. Individuals and Groups Involved in Education Today Teaching is not a desktop job. It requires you to stand out there and be in every day. Great teachers are emotionally committed to their subject matter and their students. Realizing that students seem to feel a sense of about his teachers. They assume you're there for them. They assume your life revolves around them. It's not uncommon for a student to be surprised to see you behave normally in everyday society. Also, depending on the size of the city you're going to teach, you need to understand that you'll meet your students virtually wherever you go. Therefore, expect some of a lack of anonymity in the community. The top 10 ways to avoid teaching teacher burns is more than a job. It's a vocation. It is an always surprising mix of grueling hard work and ecstatic successes, both large and small. The most effective teachers are in it for more than just a salary. They maintain their energy levels by focusing on why he got into teaching in the first place. Here are the seven main reasons why you should join the ranks and find your own classroom. Yellow Dog Productions/Getty Images It's virtually impossible to get bored or stuck with work as challenging as teaching. Your brain is constantly involved in creative ways as you work to solve a multitude of daily problems you've never faced before. Teachers are lifelong learners who enjoy the opportunity to grow and evolve. In addition, the innocent enthusiasm of your students will keep you young as they remind you to smile even through the most frustrating moments. Anyone who enters teaching only for a windy schedule or carefree lifestyle will be immediately disappointed. Still, there are some benefits of working in a school. On the one hand, if your children attend school in the same district, everyone will have the same days off. In addition, you will have approximately two months off per year for the summer holidays. Or if you work in a district year-round, the vacation will run year-round. Either way, it's more than the two paid weeks of vacation given in most corporate jobs. The greatest asset you bring to the classroom every day is your own unique personality. Sometimes, in cubicle life, there is a need to mix and tone down your personality. However, teachers should absolutely use their individual gifts to inspire, direct, and motivate their students. And when work gets tough, sometimes it's just your sense of humor that can keep you going with any sanity. The world will always need teachers. If you're willing to work hard in any kind of environment, you'll find that you can always get a job, even as a new teacher. Learn your craft, earn your credential, become a starter, and breathe a sigh of relief knowing you have a job you can count on for decades. Most teachers are encouraged and edified by the small joys that accompany them to work with the You'll appreciate the funny things they say, the silly things they ask, the questions they ask, and the stories they write. I have a box of memories that students have given me over the years: birthday cards, drawings and small samples of their affection. Hugs, smiles and it will keep you going and remind you why you became a teacher in the first place. Every day you go before your students, you never know what you're going to say or make it leave a lasting impression on your students. We can all remember something positive (or negative) that one of our elementary school teachers told us or the class, something that stayed on our minds and reported our point of view throughout these years. When you bring all the strength of your personality and experience into the classroom, you can't help but inspire your students and shape their young, impressionable minds. This is a sacred trust given to us as teachers, and definitely one of the benefits of work. Peathegee Inc/Getty Images Most teachers enter the education profession because they want to make a difference in the world and its communities. This is a noble and courageous purpose that you must always keep at the forefront of your mind. No matter what challenges you face in the classroom, your work really has positive ramifications for your students, their families, and the future. Give your best to every student and watch them grow. This is really the best gift of all. Edited by: Janelle Cox Talk to almost any teacher and few will regret choosing education as a career path. Many teachers get great satisfaction in being able to influence their students' academic achievements and shape the future. The reasons vary from teacher to teacher, as do their reasons for choosing to teach elementary, secondary, or secondary, or even a career in education administration. The philosophy that many educators have is that teaching is a process of lifelong learning. Teachers learn from both their students and their students learn from their teachers. Through the progress of their students, teachers learn to create intellectually appropriate and creative ways for students to achieve their academic goals. Teachers also learn the diverse abilities of students and how to leverage their interests through the development of techniques that stimulate curiosity among students. In addition, teaching specific subjects requires teachers to learn more about the subject than they expect their students to learn. A good reason to become a teacher is to be a motivator for students. When students feel they owe their success to the teacher who instilled good study habits in them, they seek out their former teachers to express their gratitude. Teachers like to listen to their former students, because they feel a sense of pride knowing that they have made a difference in the lives of students they have taught throughout their careers. The importance of what teachers do will always be a topic of debate when it comes to wages - many think that they should earn much more than they have their ability to shape the minds of students who will one day become contributors to society. However, according to data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, average wages for 2011 2011 and high school teachers were $55,270, $55,780 and $56,760, respectively. This is significantly above the national average salary of $45,230 for all occupations. Teachers can never be replaced, despite learning and technology solutions at a distance for virtually every aspect of life. In addition, there is a high demand for teachers in areas and schools serving underrepresented populations, including at-risk youth. For some teaching positions, there is a bonus of reducing student loans for teaching in certain geographic areas. There is also the potential for professional mobility. Teachers can start in the classroom, but with advanced certification, they can move on to academic management roles such as counselor, primary or community activism, and teacher liaison positions. Teachers often have a great summer vacation time as well as free time during vacations and spring break, giving teachers the opportunity to spend time with their own children when they are out of school. With several weeks off during the summer, teachers can earn extra money by teaching summer school, traveling or pursuing interests they may have time to do during the academic year. Year.
